Crisis and Conflict in Agriculture

Edited by Rami Zurayk, American University of Beirut, Lebanon, Eckart Woertz, Barcelona Centre for International Affairs (CIDOB), Spain and Rachel Bahn, American University of Beirut, Lebanon

The book discusses the impact of crisis and conflict within the agricultural and rural context. It looks at the effects of crisis and conflict on agriculture in developing countries, including effects on both the physical and human agricultural landscape.

This book discusses the causes and effects of crisis and conflict within an agricultural and rural context. It explores issues such as competition over resources, and looks at how crisis and conflict impact upon developing country agriculture for both the physical and human agricultural landscape. It reviews crises stemming from politically-driven violence as well as natural disasters and climate change.

Exploring the relationship between agriculture and conflicts and crises before, during and after crisis periods, this book:

- Evaluates controversial issues such as land-grabs and the growing of illegal crops;
- Covers methodological approaches such as GIS-based studies, ethnographic studies and the blending of methods;
- Includes numerous case studies focusing on developing countries within Asia, Latin America, Middle East, North Africa, and Sub-Saharan Africa.

Key Features

- How conflict and crisis affect agriculture
- How agricultural and rural issues contribute to conflict and crisis
- Case studies from a wide geographical area and of impact types
- How to mitigate impacts of conflict and crisis

Audience

An important resource for researchers of agricultural economics, development studies, sustainable agriculture and food security, this is also an illuminating read for students of these disciplines and agricultural extension workers.
